This afternoon, when we were too busy to examine the work a book agent came in and offered to sell the editor for one-third price a compendium of all the world's wisdom if he would only permit his name to be used in canvassing. The same sort of bait, we presume, is offered to other fish. We long since became convinced that the wisdom of the world cannot be purchased at bargain prices, nor condensed sufficiently to be swallowed as a pill.

RIDING AND WALKING.

A little while ago Edward P. Weston, the pedestrian, walked from Portland, Maine, to Chicago, in about 30 days. It was a great feat of endurance and grit, as all the world knows. BUT IT OUGHT NOT TO MAKE IT A POPULAR WAY FOR PEOPLE TO GET FROM PORTLAND TO CHICAGO. And it will not.

While Mr. Weston was trudging on his weary way the history of the world might have been changed—ships have circled the seas—express trains have explored the remotest parts of a continent—business successes have been made and unmade.

Mr. Weston beat his own record of a life-time ago—but he could not make it either wise or popular for people to walk from Portland to Chicago.

The Portland man who started to Chicago by express train on the same day that Mr. Weston started afoot reached there—transacted his business, went home, took a trip to Europe on business, and arrived home again from London on the day Mr. Weston reached Chicago.

The contrast shows a phase of modern business life. An occasional merchant tries, figuratively, to walk from Portland to Chicago—to compete, on foot, with express trains. He tries to "walk" his store to success—by, perhaps, a little of the sort of "advertising" which is afforded by fence-signs and dead-wall posters. Or, he takes the "local train" by planning a great many "stops" in his newspaper advertising. In this case, while his store will eventually "arrive," it will have failed to match the PACE set by the stores that adopt the express train idea of modern aggressive newspaper advertising—pace-making publicity—with few if any stops on the schedule.

Incidentally, it costs more in MONEY, as well as in time, to walk from Portland to Chicago than it does to travel in a Pullman car.

And it costs more in MONEY to make a store "walk," than to have it ride on the PUBLICITY SPECIAL maintained by the Daily Record. Figure it out—you're good at figures.

FRANK HULL AND ETHEL CLARK MARRIED YESTERDAY.

Frank F. Hull and Miss Ethel Clark were married at two o'clock yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Morrison, at 509 North Missouri avenue, where Miss Clark has made her home for some time. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. H. Doran, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Hagerman, in the presence of a few friends. The couple will go at once to Dexter, where the groom has a fine farm and where they will make their home. The bride has resided in Roswell some time, having come here for her health and having rejoined that which she sought. Both she and the groom have many friends here and at Dexter.
